First Nation Women

It is estimated that there are approximately five hundred First Nation Women missing in Canada, mostly from the Western Provinces, over the past fifteen years. It is alleged that these deaths and disappearances are under-reported, and that the public and media are indifferent to the murder of a native woman. It is believed that white men hunt down vulnerable Native women, and viciously beat or kill them. It is also believed that the criminal investigations of these incidents are flawed. Below is a list naming some of these women; Unless otherwise indicated the dates represent when the woman's body was found:

Helen Betty Osborne, 19

Abducted from a city street for the sexual pleasure of two men. They felt that she should give it up because she was a squaw. She was killed in cold blood. It took sixteen years before her murderer was brought to trial. He is now walking free.
